The Third Degree

A Narrative Of Metropolitan Life

Copyright, 1910, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

By Charles Klein and Arthur Hornblow

Illustrations By Ray Walters

It was not her fault, she mused, if she was not a lady. Literally brought up in the gutter, what advantages had she had? Her mother died in childbirth and her father, a professional gambler, abandoned the little girl to the tender mercies of an indifferent neighbor. When she was about eight years old her father was arrested. He refused to pay police blackmail, was indicted, railroaded to prison and died soon after in convict stripes. There was no provision for Annie's maintenance, so at the age of nine she found herself toiling in a factory, a helpless victim of the brutalizing system of child slavery, which in spite of prohibiting laws still disgraces the United States. Ever since that time she had earned her own living. The road had often been hard, there were times when she thought she would have to give up the fight; other girls she had met had hinted at an easier way of earning one's living, but she had kept her courage, refused to listen to evil counsel and always managed to keep her name unsullied. She left the factory to work behind the counter in a New York dry goods store. Then about a year ago she drifted to New Haven and took the position of waitress at the restaurant which the college boys patronized.

Robert Underwood was among the students who came almost every day. He made love to her from the start, and one day attempted liberties which she was prompt to resent in a way he did not relish. After that he let her alone. She never liked the man. She knew him to be unprincipled as well as vicious. One night he brought Howard Jeffries to the restaurant. They seemed the closest of cronies and she was sorry to see what had influence the elder sophomore had over the young freshman, to whom she was at once attracted. Every time they came she watched them and she noticed how under his mentor Howard became more hardened. He drank more and more and became a reckless gambler. Underwood seemed to exercise a baneful spell over him. She saw that he would soon be ruined with such a man as Underwood for a constant companion. Her interest in the young student grew. They became acquainted and Howard, not realizing that she was older than he, was immediately captivated by her vivacious charm and her common-sense views. They saw each other more frequently and their friendship grew until one day Howard asked her to marry him.

While she sometimes blamed herself for having listened too willingly to Howard's pleadings, she did not altogether regret the step she had taken. It was most unfortunate that there must be this rupture with his family, yet something within told her that she was doing God's work—saving a man's soul. Without her, Howard would have gone swiftly to ruin, there was little doubt of that. His affection for her had partly, if not wholly, redeemed him and was keeping him straight. He had been good to her ever since their marriage and done everything to make her comfortable. Once he took a position as guard on the elevated road, but caught cold and was forced to give it up. She wanted to go to work again, but he angrily refused. That alone showed that he was not entirely devoid of character. He was unfortunate at present and they were poor, but by dint of perseverance he would win out and make a position for himself without his father's help. These were their darkest days, but light was ahead. As long as they loved each other and had their health what more was necessary?

"Say, Annie, I have an idea," suddenly blurted out Howard.

"What is it, dear?" she asked, her reveries thus abruptly interrupted.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Plenty of Them in El Paso and Good Reason For It.

Wouldn't any woman be happy. After years of backache suffering. Days of misery, nights of unrest. The distress of urinary troubles. She finds relief and cure? No reason why any El Paso reader should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. H. L. Packard, 611 Texas Street, El Paso, Texas, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have been used in our house for over a year and their merit has been amply proven. The person having occasion to take this remedy, complained of a pain in the small of the back and right side and at times the suffering was so acute that it was almost impossible for the patient to turn in bed. As soon as Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Kelly & Pollard's drug store were used the condition of the patient improved and there has been but little trouble since. I highly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to other kidney sufferers."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

SMITH HAS NO OPPOSITION

Congressman from This District Will Make the Race Again.

Washington, D. C., April 22.—Congressman W. R. Smith, of the 16th Texas district, today forwarded to C. Martin, of Roby, Texas, chairman of the Democratic executive committee of the 16th district, his application to have his name appear on the official ballot of the primary election to be held July 23, as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for representative in congress. Smith was elected to the 58th congress and has remained continuously. It now appears that he will have no opposition for the nomination and that he will be elected to the 59th congress with a large Democratic majority.

CENSUS ENUMERATOR WANTS

As the time approaches for the close of the official government census, the census enumerator and his chief clerk are anxious for everyone in El Paso to be included in the official count of census. To insure this, chief census enumerator Kilpatrick has requested the public to telephone him at the chamber of commerce in any case where the count has not been taken correctly or anyone has been missed. This means the count by the official government census taker will be the same as the volunteer census, which was for nothing more than a check for the official enumerators.
